In a small local authority, Bro, west of Stockholm an extensive renewal project took place in the nineties. This project concerned both a run-down housing area from the 1960's (see Råby ROT) as well as a centre rebuilding after the old one was burnt down in 1992.

Bro Centre was converted from a big box to a small town centre with different squares and a mix of functions. Often the ground floor have commercial use and the two or three floors above consists of apartments. There is also a substantial roof garden.

The new Bro centre is colourful and has more identity and feeling.
